Cops slow to get phone records

Laura Babcock.
Missing online escort
'romantically linked' to suspect in Bosma case

Toronto police announced Tuesday that a woman who went missing last year had phone contact with murder suspect Dellen Millard shortly before she disappeared — but they claim officers didn't get her phone records until almost a year into their investigation, when Millard was arrested.

Millard was taken into custody on May 10 and charged with the murder of Ancaster man Tim Bosma. Since then, Babcock's ex-boyfriend Shawn Lerner has come forward to the media to say her records show Millard was the last person she spoke with by phone. Lerner told Torstar News Service he gave police the phone records last summer, which Babcock's family also confirmed.

After Babcock disappeared, Lerner filed a missing-persons report on July 14, 2012. Police interviewed some of Babcock's acquaintances, but not Millard, said Det. Mike Carbone.

Carbone said Millard and Babcock were "romantically linked ... but I wouldn't say they had a traditional dating relationship."

Carbone said Babcock began working in the sex trade, advertising as an escort on the Internet. He said there is no evidence Millard was a client.

According to Babcock's phone records, she and Millard exchanged a series of calls that ended July 3, 2012, Carbone said. He added she is believed to have had some kind of contact with others after that time, but he would not elaborate.

The 22 Division officers would have gotten a production order for Babcock's phone records as part of a missing-persons investigation, said Carbone, but they hadn't done so yet — almost a year after she went missing.

"It takes some time to prepare one, but it doesn't take a year," he said. "They would have gotten to a production order at some point."

Carbone described the investigation of Babcock's disappearance by 22 Division as "thorough" and said he is not concerned about the delay in requesting her phone records.

"The officers were very diligent... I would not say the officers didn't take it serious."

Asked if police might have requested the phone records more promptly if Babcock hadn't been involved in the sex trade, he said, "Absolutely not."

Ford crack scandal: Video might be 'gone'

Gawker. Editor-in-chief John Cook says owner of alleged video wants to be left alone

Gawker.com, the U.S. website that raised more than $200,000 to buy a video apparently showing Mayor Rob Ford smoking crack cocaine, is reporting that the video might be gone.

An intermediary who initially contacted Gawker about the cellphone video now says its owner went underground after the story attracted worldwide media attention, John Cook, Gawker's editor in chief, wrote Tuesday.

Gawker reached its fundraising goal on May 27. But until Friday, Cook says, he hadn't heard back from the go-between.

After weeks of silence, Cook says the owner contacted the intermediary and that person reported back to Cook on Friday.

Cook says "a fear of being identified, and a strong desire from the Somali community to make the whole thing go away" caused the owner to go silent.

Cook has watched the video once, while two Torstar News Service reporters, Kevin

Quoted

"His message was: 'It's gone. Leave me alone.' It was, the intermediary told me, a short conversation."

John Cook, Gawker's editor in chief

Donovan and Robyn Doolittle, watched the video three times.

Both say the video shows Ford inhaling what appears to be crack cocaine from a glass pipe and making homophobic and racially charged remarks. Torstar News Service couldn't verify the video's authenticity.

Ford has denied the video exists and says he doesn't smoke crack cocaine.

"The intermediary has claimed that a copy of the video was made and taken outside Toronto for safekeeping. We don't know if that's true, or, if it is, whether that copy is also 'gone.' We can still imagine any number of scenarios in which this video comes to light," Cook wrote on Tuesday.

Cook has said Gawker would allow the owner of the video about a month to get in touch and if it didn't happen, he would donate the money to a Canadian non-profit addressing substance-abuse issues.

Deals 'beyond smelly:' Expert

$1 sale. Lawyer for man accused in Tim Bosma murder dismisses allegations of fraudulent transfers

In the days following his arrest for the alleged murder of Tim Bosma, Dellen Millard transferred ownership of three residential properties to his mother for $1, Torstar News Service has learned.

The conspicuously timed real estate dump raises concerns about Millard's intentions, according to eight legal experts in real estate, tax and estates, who reviewed the documents.

Those experts agree the timing of the transfers is "highly unusual."

Nothing to see here

"I don't think there's anything unusual about a family member taking over assets while you're in jail. I don't believe there's anything untoward."

Deepak Paradkar, Millard's lawyer

Protecting his assets from future lawsuits was among the potential motivations cited by several lawyers interviewed.

"The timing is beyond smelly. It doesn't make sense to me," said Andrew Fortis, real estate lawyer with Hummingbird Lawyers. "It raises a lot of red flags."

Ontario. Record number of teachers taking days off

Ontario school boards are scrambling to cover a record number of teachers taking time off, as they use sick days they no longer can bank until retirement.

The sudden need for substitute teachers in recent weeks has so outstripped demand — especially on Fridays and Mondays — that some elementary principals have asked librarians, special education and ESL teachers to scrap regular duties for a day to supervise classrooms. A handful of high schools have cancelled classes in the senior grades for lack of a teacher.

"Last Friday we had the highest volume of teachers taking 'family responsibility' days we've ever seen; but our 'fill rates' (the number of vacancies they could fill) are very low — this is an irregular level of vacancies," noted Scott Moreash, associate director of the Peel District School Board.

Marijuana in the U.S.

Possession arrests higher for blacks despite equal use

Black people are arrested for possessing marijuana at a higher rate than white people, even though marijuana use by both races is about the same, the American Civil Liberties Union reports in a new study.

The analysis of federal crime data, released Tuesday, found marijuana arrest rates for blacks were 3.73 times greater than those for whites nationally in 2010. In some counties, the arrest rate was 10 to 30 times greater.

The report comes as Colorado and Washington just legalized adult possession of small amounts of marijuana.

B.C. grow-op. Disguised bunker containing 430 plants, industrial generator linked to Hells Angels, police say

EMILY JACKSON
Metro in Vancouver

A sophisticated underground marijuana grow-op disguised as a Langley hobby farm — complete with three sheep, a pig and guarded by about a dozen pit bulls and Chihuahuas — was busted by police over the weekend.

RCMP needed a crane to excavate five steel shipping containers connected with a continuous underground pathway at the property in the 27000-block of 56th Avenue, according to a news release from B.C.'s Combined Forces Special Enforcement Unit.

Three men and one woman were arrested when investigators found 430 plants at the site, though they were later released pending further investigation. The dogs are being cared for by one of their family members.

Officers were "shocked" that the operators cut into a nearby natural gas pipeline to power the elaborate bunker system with an industrial-sized natural gas generator worth about $100,000.

"This had the potential to be extremely dangerous to the public and emergency responders," CFSEU-BC spokesman Sgt. Lindsey Houghton said in a statement.

Police believe the grow-op, described as a "complex operation that required a great deal of planning and equipment," including cranes and flatbed trucks, was running for at least a couple of years.

This is the second underground grow-op the CFSEU-BC has dismantled in the past two months. Police believe both are linked to the Hells Angels.

Pace of debt accumulation slows

Average Canadian consumer debt, excluding mortgages, fell by two per cent in the first quarter of 2013 compared with the fourth quarter of 2012. THE CANADIAN PRESS FILE

Personal finance. Data shows largest quarterly drop in non-mortgage debt since 2004

New data on consumer credit suggests Canadians are becoming more cautious about making purchases that involve taking on debt.

The analysis by TransUnion

Market Trends shows average consumer debt in Canada, excluding mortgages, fell by two per cent to $26,935 in the first three months of 2013 from the fourth quarter in 2012.

While total debt is still 3.5 per cent higher from a year ago, it was the first quarterly drop since the third quarter of 2011 and the largest since the first began collecting the data in 2004.

TransUnion vice-president

Thomas Higgins says while the fall-off was significant, it is still too early to declare a trend. He notes that the 2011 decline was quickly followed by rapid increases in 2012.

The Bank of Canada has welcomed the general trend to more frugal finances among households, particularly in mortgages, which make up for the vast majority of debt held by Canadians.

Would you dig through a landfill for this game?

A New Mexico city commission has agreed to allow a Canadian studio to search an old landfill where old, terrible Atari games are rumoured to be buried. The Alamogordo Daily News reports that Alamogordo, N.M., commissioners will allow Fuel Industries, which has offices in Ottawa and Los Angeles, to search the landfill for games. One sought-after game, the E.T. video game, is thought by some gamers to be one of the worst video games of all time. Atari paid Steven Spielberg tens of millions of dollars to license the E.T. name, and the dud of a game caused the troubled company's worth to sink even further at the time. Alamogordo Commissioner Jason Baldwin says he played the E.T. game and it was horrible. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

DENY MILK FOR GREENER PASTURES

I'm so confused.

This week's hot book says that if you really want a meaningful relationship, you should go on a sex diet.

Well, to be precise, it says women should go on a sex diet, but that has obvious implications for their potential partners, who are everybody else.

The book is called The 30-Day Love Detox: Cleanse Yourself of Bad Boys, Cheaters, and Men Who Won't Commit — And Find a Real Relationship.

The author is Dr. Wendy Walsh, one of those friendly experts who populate the cable news channels. She even plays cable news experts on movies like Baywatch and The Cable Guy. I'm not sure how she went from a Ryerson journalism grad to "doctor," but it happened somewhere between Halifax, where she was born, and Los Angeles, where she was reborn on Fox and

JUST SAVIN'
Paul Sullivan
metronews.ca

CNN.

She does appear to have a PhD in psychology from the California Graduate Institute, which is not based on the back of a pack of matches, so we should listen.

The diet analogy goes beyond the title. It's all about "slow love." Like "slow food," get it? Citing "evolutionary psychology," Dr. Blond Alliteration promises to help women:

- Purge junk-food men
 - Learn the five sexual myths that keep women single
 - Determine when to begin the onset of sexual activity in a new relationship
 - Avoid the biggest mistakes women make when dating online
- Spot a commitment-oriented man at his "state of readiness," which is not, apparently, what you think it is The secret: No sex for the first 30 days. As far as I can tell, she'd really like you to abstain until he puts a ring on it, but that's way too long for today's post-Sex and the City woman.

Dr. BA also says women should stop sexting during this same period of abstinence. It's the sexual equivalent of empty calories.

But! But! you're probably asking yourself: "How is this any different from the advice that mom used to dole out on a daily basis?" And, truth be known, still does. Well, it's scientific. During orgasm, the female body unleashes a tide of oxytocin, a hormone that encourages bonding. This is dangerous, according to Dr. Walsh, as a woman can think she's just hooking up when she's really bonding with some unsuitable, commitment-phobic, bad-boy creep who is just using her for sex.

So it's like mom (or dad, who knows all about commitment-phobic bad boys because he probably used to be one) with a PhD. Just goes to show the value of a good education. The moral of this story is that morality has nothing to do with it, but it's still the same old story: "Why would he buy the milk if he can get the, er, cow for free?"

Slow love rules. Even in the 21st century.

My little pony and his care bear

Foal finds comfort with teddy bear

An orphaned week-old foal sleeps soundly in the lap of his new surrogate mum — a teddy bear. Breeze, the bay pony, was found abandoned in Dartmoor National Park in Devon, southwest England, just a few hours after his birth.

After finding the newborn, rescuers from the local Mare and Foal Sanctuary took him in. Breeze had been stumbling hopelessly around the park's hillside and attempting to suckle on other mares. When he was found by rescuers after first being discovered by a local farmer, he was suffering from clinical shock and dehydration, said staff.

Stuffed companion

"We always give our orphaned foals a giant cuddly toy as a companion. They're just like human babies in the way in which it provides them with comfort."

Syra Bowden, executive director at the Mare and Foal Sanctuary

Vets come to the aid of poor pony

Despite the comforting effect from his cuddly toy, Breeze isn't OK.

Vets spent three hours by the poorly foal's side. He was placed on a saline drip, had a catheter fitted and was given crucial colostrum drips, milk and medication on his arrival. METRO

Paid to be unemployed: when actors get naked

The Internship.

Owen Wilson and Vince Vaughn use a familiar formula with their latest bumbling, stumbling comedy

IN FOCUS
Richard Crouse
scene@metronews.ca

The new buddy comedy The Internship pairs Owen Wilson and Vince Vaughn for the first time since 2005's Wedding Crashers.

They are still wild and crazy guys, but this time out they are unemployed wild and crazy guys pushed out of their jobs by technology.

Unable to get a foothold in the new media field they take intern jobs at Google.

"We're looking at some sort of mental Hunger Games against a bunch of genius kids for just a handful of jobs," says Wilson.

Many movies have used unemployment as the starting point for storytelling.

In Lost in America, rated one of Bravo's 100 Funniest Movies, Albert Brooks plays a successful advertising executive who gets fired for insulting his boss.

Free from the shackles of employment he goes all carpe diem and convinces his wife Linda (Julie Hagerty) to leave her job and explore the country in a Winnebago. When they lose their nest egg on a Las Vegas stop over they reenter the work force as a crossing guard and manager at a Der Wienerschnitzel restaurant, respectively.

As the movie ends they hit the road once again, hoping to reclaim their old jobs and lifestyles.

It would be hard to imagine a more toxic workplace than the real estate office in Glengarry Glen Ross.

Encouragement comes in the form of verbal abuse — most of which can't be printed in a family newspaper — and a motivational sales contest offering three prizes.

Get hungry

"We're looking at some sort of mental Hunger Games against a bunch of genius kids for just a handful of jobs."

Owen Wilson
Talking about his new movie The Internship.

The top seller wins a Cadillac Eldorado.

"Second prize is a set of steak knives," says Blake (Alec Baldwin). "Third prize is you're fired."

Playwright David Mamet based the original play on his experiences working in a real estate office in the 1970s.

Finally, The Full Monty is a comedy that takes a serious look at the effects of unemployment on the individual and the community.

Set in Sheffield, England, it's the story of six men, most unemployed steel workers, who come up with a unique way to pay the bills.

They decide to form a Chippendale dancer style group, separating themselves from the pack by going "the full monty" and go completely stark naked.

While filming, the actors agreed to go completely nude in front of 400 extras provided they only had to do it once.

They got it in one take, and according to Roger Ebert, the inspiring and revealing final scene "was applauded at the screening I attended."

Mayer exploring Perry's wonderland once again

It looks like on-again, off-again couple Katy Perry and John Mayer are very much on again, though this time it's a more "casual" relationship, according to E! News.

"They are just hanging out," a source says.

"They are not putting a

Though they haven't stepped out in public together since their March breakup, Perry and Mayer have reportedly been spending most of their nights together.

OUR TAKE ON THE WORLD OF CELEBRITIES

The Word

Radcliffe really wants to be a rad dad

Daniel Radcliffe wants to start a family, and he may be in somewhat of a hurry about it.

"I'd like to get started on it before my 30s," the 23-year-old Harry Potter star tells Time Out London. "I like the idea of being a youngish parent so I've got energy to play football, even though they'll be better than me by the time they're four."

And while he doesn't currently have a mom-to-be in mind, the height challenged Radcliffe admits she'll have to do a lot of the heaving lifting, height-wise.

"I will have to find a very tall wife if they're going to be good at sports," he says. "You could be my size as a boxer, you'd just have to be a super featherweight or something."

Al Pacino

Don't say Pacino never did anything for you, Bruce

If Al Pacino is to be believed, he could have been Han Solo. The Oscar winner says he nearly starred in some of the biggest franchise-starters in Hollywood history but decided to turn them down.

"Star Wars was mine for the taking, but I didn't understand the script," Pacino told an audience in London, according to the Evening Standard.

He also claims he turned down the lead role in Die Hard that eventually went to Bruce Willis. "I gave that boy a career," Pacino said.

Hats off to Panama!

Country of contrasts. This little nation with a famous canal boasts a bustling city, pristine beaches and verdant countryside

FERNANDO CARNEIRO
life@metronews.ca

From modern skyscrapers in Panama City to the wild countryside and pristine beaches, Panama is a country of contrasts.

The Panama Canal, of course, brings people from all over the world to the capital, where international cuisine is easily found along with Caribbean flavours in restaurants such as Manolo Caracol and La Vitrola.

Its imposing skyline, dotted with ultra-modern architecture, is on display through the windows of downtown hotels like the Radisson Decapolis or the rooftop of the Hard Rock Hotel Panama Megapolis.

The nightlife includes a variety of charming restaurants in the Casco Viejo (old city) and salsa clubs featuring live bands such as the Havana Club Panama.

The local currency? They use U.S. dollars, except for the coinage, which is called the Balboa and minted in Canada.

A short drive away lies a different world in the tropical forest. Day tours for zip lining, culture and craft, or a visit to the Embera Indigenous Community range from $55 to $90.

tic oceans.

Just a couple of hours from Panama City lies Farallon, home to the Royal Decameron Golf, Beach Resort and Villas Panama.

This all-inclusive resort is situated in a "dry arch," which means more sunny days on the beach. Ten restaurants, a spa and various swimming pools make exploring this large resort fun for days. Nightly shows and a disco are a good way to cap a busy day.

Getting there

From Toronto, Nolitours offers flights through Air Transat every Thursday during the summer and Mondays during the fall and winter.

Canadian influence

Canadian architect Frank Gehry — whose wife is Panamanian — designed the soon-to-be-finished Biomuseo, which showcases Panama's biodiversity. The distinct building, expected to become a cultural icon, is colourful to reflect its tropical environment.

The world's greatest shortcut

It's impressive today and it must've blown people's minds 99 years ago when the first ship crossed the Panama Canal. Possibly the world's greatest shortcut — it takes ships an average of eight to 10 hours to transit the Canal versus nearly a month to go around South America — the Canal is also a must-see tourist attraction.

Its on-site museum has images and tools starting with the original French attempt at building the Canal, which was followed by the successful American completion of the crossing in 1914. Tens of thousands died during construction due to illnesses carried by mosquitoes and engineers were forced to dig through the continental divide.

Today, the Canal is one of the Seven Wonders of the Modern World and employs about 9,500 people, bringing in $1.5 billion to the Panamanian economy.

Although managed by the United States until 1999, the Canal is now nationally managed with an expansion on the way to handle larger ships. It's expected to be completed next year when the Canal turns 100.

At the Miraflores lock, there's a buffet restaurant and viewing platform that allow tourists to see the ships enter the locks and watch them go through the various stages linking the ocean to Gatun Lake.

Hit the road this summer

Loren Christie
life@metronews.ca

If the lure of the open road is calling you, just pick a stretch of highway somewhere between Trinity and Tofino. From coast to coast, Canada has limitless options when it comes to the makings of a great summer road trip.

Nova Scotia's Cabot Trail has always been a personal favourite. It offers stunning scenery, wildlife viewing (whales and moose) and the opportunity to touch the distinct Acadian and Scottish cultures that colour the history of the province. It is an ongoing debate whether to do the drive clockwise or counter-clockwise — I prefer clockwise. It builds your anticipation of the sites along the route in a more logical fashion.

silver-steeped villages surrounded by mountains and serenaded by the sea. The route forms a loop of about 900 kilometres. As the seaway widens into the gulf, try some ferry-hopping to explore both coasts of the St. Lawrence River.

The Trans Labrador Highway is a relatively new 1,054 kilometre frontier highway that allows you to explore the wilderness, culture and adventurous nature of Labrador. Make sure to visit the 16th century Basque whaling station turned National Historic Site in Red Bay. This section of the highway also offers numerous whale and iceberg viewing spots and the chance to visit the tallest lighthouse in Atlantic Canada.

For those who want to hit the pavement but don't want to do the actual driving go sidcar with Jasper Motorcycle Tours. They offer numerous touring packages of Alberta's stunning Icefields Parkway. You get up close and personal with not only the asphalt, but the scenery and the wildlife. On my tour we saw a brown bear, big horned sheep and more elk than I could count. The drivers are fully knowledgeable about the area so you enjoy a fully guided tour as you take in the sights.

If you prefer not having to suit up in leathers and a motorcycle helmet and are looking for something a little more fancy, consider Niagara Classic Cabs in Southern Ontario. They will customize your tour through the Niagara wine-growing region in high style. It's perfect for people who want to hit the wineries without worrying about who is going to be the designated driver.

Geocaching craze. Try a treasure hunt next time you travel

Ever since there were pirates or wide-eyed children searching for eggs on Easter morning, treasure hunting has been a draw for the adventurous.

The adventure, of course, is in the hunt as much as it is in finding what has been hidden and meant to be found.

Combine that sense of adventure with global positioning technology and a desire to take advantage of the great outdoors, and you have a phenomenon known as geocaching — and tourism promoters are catching on, hoping to cash in.

Some tourism groups have watched the geocaching trend blossom over the past decade, and are taking advantage of it to attract treasure hunters and their treasure.

"There are a series of geocaches that have been set up in various locations with the express purpose of bringing people to that area," says John Robb, president of the Ontario Geocaching Association.

The Ottawa Valley Tourist Association, based in Pembroke, Ont., encourages visitors to pack their GPS units and head to Renfrew

County, northwest of Ottawa, a region that has become a popular geocaching destination with more than 300 cache sites scattered throughout the area.

Forgot your GPS, or don't have one? No problem. The association, like others, will loan one with a damage deposit.

It has become big business. "Anybody that does any level of geocaching will, at some point, travel to do geocaching," said Robb.

One of the largest annual geocaching events held in Canada is organized by the Central Ontario Geocachers. This year, hotels in and around Ontario's cottage country are expected to be inundated on June 15 by thousands of the sports enthusiasts for a hunt held at Geneva Park on the shore of Lake Couchiching, about 150 kilometres north of Toronto.

Powerful presentations

Skill of the speak.

The how-tos of delivering an effective and engaging presentation at work

KAYANI
TalentEgg.ca

From time to time, we are all faced with the challenge of delivering an effective presentation or communicating with others effectively to get our message across at work.

To deliver an effective presentation, it is important to first understand the communication model and the three components of communication.

The communication model begins with the sender (you). The sender encodes the message, the message goes through your chosen channel (such as a PowerPoint presentation), and the receiver (your audience) will then decode your message and respond with their feedback. There are also three very key elements that are the makeup of effective communication: 10 per cent content, 35 per cent vocal qualities, and 55 per cent body language and facial expressions.

The amount of energy you demonstrate during your presentation will resonate with your audience. iStock

Now that you understand the communication process, here are some tips on delivering an effective presentation:

Know your audience

It is very important to know your audience so that you can strategically relate your presentation topic and method of delivery to your audience. For example, if your audience is a panel of recruiters at a sales company (yes, an interview is probably one of your most important presentations!), you will need to dress professionally and present your work experiences and skills in a professional manner.

Use visuals

Most of us are visual learners, and it can truly make your presentation so much better if you use visuals, such as images, diagrams, charts and videos, to support your presentation and message.

The classic presentation approach

Tell them what you are going to tell them, tell them, and tell them what you just told them. This is the classic presentation approach that will help keep your presentation smooth and organized. Begin with an agenda, then the body of your presentation content, and finish off with a summary and conclusion.

Don't bring the beach to your business

Who wears short-shorts? Perhaps you do on your off-time, but try to be mindful of making your co-workers uncomfortable

MARY WHEELER
Metro World News

It's finally summer, that sweet time of year when we get to shake off our winter doldrums and shed the extra layers of clothing we've been bundled in for the past six months. But though the long, hazy days ahead are synonymous with relaxation, this doesn't necessarily translate to your work wardrobe. It may be beach weather out there, but that doesn't mean you can start showing up to the office looking like you're headed to the shore. We asked four style experts in Boston to weigh in on the summer staples that are appropriate for the workplace and those you should save for those weekend seaside jaunts.

Do: Coloured jeans

While jeans are typically seen as a "Friday only" look, a pair with a pop of colour is a great way to show off your personality. The right coloured jeans definitely do work at the office, says Dani McDonald, owner of Flock. "It's a great way to incorporate the colours of the season into your work attire," says McDonald. For a dressier look, McDonald recommends pairing your jeans with a silk blouse or a well-pressed shirt — with collar unbuttoned at top.

Do: Florals

Summer rules

Our experts also tell us that...

- If you're wearing open-toed shoes or sandals, a pedicure is a must, says Dingwell.
- You should invest in a good strapless bra. Bra straps, especially plastic, shouldn't be seen, says Benson.
- Lightweight dresses can be a little sheer, so wear a slip, says Santorelli.
- If you're not a fan of denim, then coloured khakis are a great option, says Benson.

Think a fun floral print is too youthful for the office? Think again! "Floral (dresses) are on trend and work perfect for the office," says Ann Dingwell, owner of Turtle.

As long as the dress is the proper length, and not too low-cut, they're an office do, says Dingwell. To keep warm in AC blasted offices, Dingwell recommends pairing dresses with a jacket or lightweight cashmere cardigan. Guys may want to add a pop of colour with a floral tie design, perhaps a nice paisley.

Don't: Maxi dresses

While long, flowing maxi dresses are both incredibly comfortable and versatile enough for most occasions, they don't pass for professional office attire.

"Maxi dresses tend to (either) be a little too casual (think beach wear or bathing suit cover ups) or too dressy for a formal work environment," says Pam Santorelli, owner of Habit.

Santorelli recommends saving the maxis for the weekends, when you can dress them up — or down — as needed.

Do: Tank tops and T-shirts

Gone are the days when baring shoulders at the office was a no-no. Tank tops are great layering pieces for work, just remember to save the rib-knit tanks for the gym. "Tank tops in the office are a do if they're dressy," says McDonald.

To keep the look work appropriate, McDonald suggests something structured, like a peplum tank, paired with a skirt.

Guys may want to avoid a printed T-shirt, but a solid-coloured or patterned T worn with a cardigan or sports jacket offers a light and fresh look.

Don't: Shorts

While shorts can exude a preppy confidence, Emily Benson, founder and owner of The Fashion Truck, a mobile fashion boutique, recommends steering clear of them.

"There are few occasions and few styles of shorts that actually work for a business setting," says Benson. So when it's 90 degrees out there and pants just won't do, go for a dress.

Don't: Flip-Flops

While these casual sandals are many people's go-to footwear on a swelteringly hot day, flip-flopping your way to your desk won't win you any marks at the office. Flip-flops should be worn only at the beach, says Benson.

Guys, this goes for you too.

VAN BUUREN
For Metro

It's Canadian Environment Week (June 2-8) and the perfect time to celebrate the environment and do more to help reduce your ecological footprint. The theme this year is water because it is the International Year of Water Co-operation.

Here are different ways to protect the environment this week — and all year long:

- 1 Install low-flow shower heads.
- 2 Limit showers to five minutes.
- 3 Participate in a World Oceans Day activity (World Oceans Day is June 8). For ideas on what to do, visit worldoceansday.ca.
- 4 Install a clothesline and air-dry laundry.

- The Commuter Challenge is a friendly competition between cities and workplaces to encourage everyone to cycle or walk, use public transportation, carpool, or to telecommute. Register at commuterchallenge.ca for details. Final results will show emission reduction, calorie consumption, and distance and fuel cost savings.

- 5 Carry a reusable mug and use it at work and in coffee shops.
- 6 Start composting at home, or get involved in a community composting program. For more, see greenactioncentre.ca/live/

- 9 Turn off the water when you brush your teeth.
- 10 Buy local produce. It's fresher and less dependent on transportation.

- 11 Celebrate Clean Air Day Wednesday and leave the car at home.
- 12 Install a low flow toilet. Toilets use 40 per cent more water than needed.

Mile High to the bottom. After building Western Conference contender in Denver, NBA GM of the year Ujiri arrives in Toronto

There was no mistaking or disputing the passion in Masai Ujiri's voice.

Passion for his heritage, for his adopted city, for the franchise that employs him, for the job that he now holds.

The new Raptors general manager talked of being "home" and of feeling the responsibility for all of African basketball, for the team that gave him his first front-office job; it was a tour de force

World of responsibility

"I'm from Africa and I have to be on this stage to represent my continent.... The only way you create an opportunity for people over there is to win."

New Raptors GM Masai Ujiri, a native of Nigeria who was the first African-born chief decision-maker in all four major North American professional sports leagues when he assumed control of the Denver Nuggets.

news conference at the Air Canada Centre on Tuesday.

But behind it all, it is evident that the buzzword for the immediate Raptors future is patience.

Passion and patience. Talk about "rebranding." Ujiri, the 42-year-old Nigerian who signed a five-year deal worth a reported $15 million, would not get into specifics about a roster that he said had some "good pieces" but "some things we need to correct."

He shunned talk of forward Andrea Bargnani's future and said he'd need "two, three weeks" to make a decision on head coach Dwane Casey.

"It's going to take patience, it's going to take will, I want to instill a passion to win," he said.

"At the end of the day, I'm a basketball guy and I want to put a product out there that's going to compete one day for a championship. Sometimes it's going to be tough, sometimes it's going to be hard but overall, we're in a good place."

Rap-turous welcome for Masai Ujiri

CATHAL KELLY
Special to Metro

This was more than a civic embrace. It was a long, lingering civic bear hug.

Masai Ujiri was unveiled as the Raptors' new GM on Tuesday. They flooded the Air Canada Centre atrium with MLSE functionaries to provide sufficient applause.

As the first of it died down, Ujiri blurted out, "I'm home. I came home."

More cheers. A few hoots.

No city in the world enjoys a reassuring stroke more than this one. Ujiri, doubtless speaking from the heart (we know because he said that), does seem to love the town. He said that, too.

By hiring him, the franchise earned itself a day in out of the cold and the chance to take a warm, emotional bath.

Though the Raptors have never been able to lure players, much hay was made of their ability to lure top-notch suits.

2014 Mitsubishi Mirage

ALL PHOTOS WHEELBASEMEDIA.COM

2014 Mitsubishi Mirage

- Type. Four-door, front-wheel-drive sub-compact hatchback
- Engines (hp). 1.2-litre DOHC three-cylinder (74hp)
- Transmissions. Five-speed manual; continuously variable (CVT)
- Base price (incl. destination) $13,000 (est.)

Design

The car is larger than the Chevrolet Spark, for example, in most key exterior measurements by five to 7.5 centimetres. However, it's more petite than other competitors, notably the Ford Fiesta, Honda Fit and Hyundai Accent hatches.

The dash is simple yet tasteful.

Fuel Economy

Contemplating a vehicle this small usually involves compromises and in the Mirage's case you give up room in return for exemplary fuel economy. Mitsubishi is estimating 5.3 l/100 km in the city and 4.4 in the highway. That beats the Chevy Spark's 6.3/5.1 rating and even surpasses the Smart Fortwo's 5.8/4.7.

Engine

The Mirage's pump-passing nature comes from a 1.2-litre three-cylinder engine that generates a modest 74 horsepower and 74 pound-feet of torque. Matched with it is your choice of a five-speed manual transmission or optional continuously variable unit (CVT).

Review. Yet another global small car finds a home in North America

wheelbasemedia.com

It's lean times these days for Mitsubishi fans. With only a variety of Lancer and Outlander models plus the iMiEV electric car on showroom floors, product diversity is definitely lacking. Fortunately, some relief is at hand in the form of the 2014 Mirage sub-compact.

In the distant past, various Mirages were imported to North America wearing Mitsubishi, Dodge and Plymouth labels (Chrysler and Mitsubishi once worked closely together). That well dried up after the 2002 model year, but it will be at least partially replenished this fall by a small four-door hatchback that the automaker promises will be one of the most fuel-efficient non-hybrids you can buy.

The new five-passenger

Mirage hatchback, currently manufactured in Thailand for Mitsubishi's European and Asian markets, is due here this fall.

A quick walk-around confirms that the vehicle's diminutive appearance is no, uh, mirage. The little zipper is perched low to the ground on tiny 14-inch wheels that would seem right at home on a Smart ForTwo. The rounded and somewhat stubby front gives the car a cute-in-its-own-way appearance that belies its wind-cheating drag coefficient. Although the front doors and liftgate are generously sized, smallish rear doors and a sloping roofline hamper three-in-a-pinch rear-seat access.

The interior appointments are simple, yet tasteful, with easy-to-read gauges and controls that gibe with the Mirage's practical nature. The 60:40 split rear seat can be folded down for added stowage (although you won't get a perfectly flat load floor), but even when occupied there's reasonable space for groceries and gear. Just don't plan to stash your golf clubs back there.

Since the sub-compact Spark is on-the-road base-priced at $13,350, it's likely the Mirage will undercut that, although there's no final word yet. The base SE actually comes with a decent list of features, such as tilt steering, keyless entry, power windows and outside mirrors, a 140-watt four-speaker audio system and an eco indicator that lights up when you're operating in a fuel-saving manner. The Mirage also has seven standard airbags, including a driver's knee inflatable.

Move up to the premium model and the content list is expected to include automatic climate and speed control, alloy wheels, steering-wheel-mounted audio switches, fog lamps and keyless entry and a start/stop button. The Mirage will never be confused for a junior-sized luxury car — leather seats, sunroof and other niceties aren't offered — but as a short-haul urban commuter it's the right car for the job.

Billionaire Musk says Supercharge me

Autopilot. Versatile multi-tasker behind Tesla to build risky North America-wide charging network

AUTO PILOT
Mike Goetz
drive@metronews.ca

Tesla is not waiting. You other electric car companies and various government jurisdictions can just keep combing your hair and looking for your wallet and house keys. Tesla is heading out the door. That's the gist of Tesla's announcement last week about its intent to build a continent-wide network of charging stations, all by its lonesome.

Supercharging

The network will utilize the new Tesla "Supercharger," currently in beta testing and scheduled to roll out to customers this summer. The technology will allow the Tesla Model S to be charged at 120 kW, replenishing three hours of driving in about 20 to 30 minutes — just enough time for a double-double and a bodily-function break. You're then free and able to drive off to another city, and another supercharger station, and to repeat that process as many times as you would like. In a statement, Tesla said the Supercharger network will enable Tesla owners "to travel long distances, for free, indefinitely." Yes, free fuel. But indefinitely? I don't think that can actually work, unless you're one of those teenage vampires.

The Network

Currently Tesla already has a network that services California and Nevada on the west coast, and the Washington, DC to Boston region on the east coast. By next month, the number of stations will triple to cover more regions, including the northwest (Vancouver to Seattle to Portland). Within six months the network will purportedly connect "most of the major metro areas in the U.S. and Canada," including Ottawa to Montreal. Apparently, it will then be possible to travel diagonally across the U.S. from Los Angeles to New York using only the Tesla Supercharger network. And within a year, the network will, according to the statement, "stretch across the continent, covering almost the entire population of the U.S. and Canada."

The man behind Tesla

The Tesla charging network is just one more bold move by Elon Musk, the enigmatic co-founder, CEO and Product Architect of Tesla Motors. Other things on the billionaire's resumé: co-founder of PayPal; co-creator and principle shareholder of SolarCity, the leading provider of solar power systems in the U.S.; chief designer at SpaceX, which does a lot of things in space with rockets, like shuttling cargo back and forth from the International Space Station. Sometimes one strong, determined and capable person taking a calculated risk is the only way big things can get done. Otherwise it's a quagmire of committees, special interest groups and over thinking. But while I admire Elon Musk, I'm not sure I like him. He's making the rest of us look bad. Especially those of us who struggle with decisions. Do I have trouble making decisions? Well, yes and no.

With prices this small,
open the door to summer.

Car colour: There's protection in that paint

Driving force. Several different layers laid on and cured on the factory floor are all part of the long term battle against corrosion

JIL MCINTOSH
Drive@metronews.ca

You might think your vehicle's paint is all about it looking good, but it's just half the story.

That paint job actually involves a multi-stage process that's as much about protecting the metal from corrosion as it is about appearance.

The first step starts before the car is even built. "The steel comes in as a coil with a zinc layer that's applied at the mill," says Tim Weingartz, paint materials and strategy manager for Ford Motor Company.

"The zinc is the first layer for corrosion protection."

The steel is made into a vehicle body, which is then dipped into two different tanks, each containing more than 60,000 litres of corrosion-resistant coating materials.

The body is then baked at 180 degrees Celsius to cure the coatings. These, plus that first zinc coating, provide three initial layers of protection against rust.

The first paint step is primer. It protects the top anti-corrosion layer from sunlight, which can make it go chalky, and it provides a smooth base for the paint.

Since it's a relatively elastic coating, it also absorbs the energy when debris hits it, helping to prevent stone chips.

"After that, we put on the layer that everyone thinks of as the paint," Weingartz says.

"It's typically a base coat which contains the colour and pigment. Over top of that, we apply clear coat. It's a superior barrier and it gives the car that depth of appearance that adds to the esthetics of the vehicle."

Some colour coats contain tiny flakes of aluminum or mica. Known as "metallic" paints, these give the finish an extra glimmer. All of the primer, paint, and clear coat layers together are about as thick as a human hair.

Once the final clear coat layer is applied, the vehicle is baked again to cure the paint.

"We used to bake the primer separately, and then the base coat and clear coat," Weingartz says.

"We now have one bake for all three layers, which lowers the CO2 footprint by anywhere from 15 to 25 per cent, and the energy saving is very significant. The lean process has elevated us environmentally, and it's a cost savings, too."

Flip your Jeep lid

Talk to any owner about their Jeep Wrangler and they'll wax poetic about their favourite off-roader. But ask them about removing and reinstalling the Jeep's canvas top and the conversation might get uncomfortable. In short, it's not much fun wrestling with the various snaps, zippers, hooks and other attachments. A solution is in hand in the form of the power-operated MyTop from Roadwire. The company states that its lid will automatically fold back and reverse itself in about six seconds and the folding/refolding process are of the same design used to operate the canopies of fighter jets. MyTop is priced at $4,700 US, plus installation. More info is available at roadwire.com.

An illuminated belt

When travelling at night, it's difficult for front or rear-seat passengers to read a book, play a game or fiddle with their personal audio devices without flipping on a glare-creating dome lamp. That won't present a problem if they use the SpotGlo light from Autolite. This fully adjustable cellphone-sized light-emitting-diode (LED) illumination source clips onto the user's seatbelt without causing any annoying and potentially distracting -for-the-driver glare. The SpotGlo is powered using three AAA batteries (not included) and will reportedly last for a minimum of 10 hours on the high setting, or 25 when set to low. One costs $10 US, visit autobarn.net.

Keep it steady

If you own a motorcycle, you've likely had occasion to transport it by trailer or in the bed of a pickup. In any event, you were likely concerned about the bike somehow tipping over. To move your ride safely and securely, consider the Motorcycle Wheel Chock that's a new product from Steadymate. The Wheel Chock can be securely bolted to the floor using the hardware that's included. Or, you can set it up in your garage by attaching the rubber feet (also included). Fits wheel sizes from 12 to 26 inches in diameter. The Wheel Chock sells for $229 and can be ordered from the Toronto-based company at steadymate.com.

Clean cleaning cloths

There are plenty of specially developed cloths, towels and mitts on the market for washing, wiping and waxing the exterior and interior of your vehicle. But how do you restore them to a useful condition after you've dirtied them up a bit? The maker of WHOOSH! claims that its biodegradable detergent will not harm the micro-fibres that are commonly used to manufacture cleaning cloths and applicators. Instead, they will turn out as soft and fluffy as new, which is what you need to get back to work on your vehicle. A 32-ounce (946 ml) bottle sells for $20 US and is available from the manufacturer at whooshinc.com.

Horoscopes

Aries

March 21 - April 20

You may prefer to hide than to deal with people who annoy you today. But that would be a shame because the planets indicate you have much to share, and much to gain from expressing your point of view.

Taurus

April 21 - May 21

Someone you live or work with will test your willingness to stand up for what you believe over the next 24 hours. They don't know you as well as they should. A Taurus never gives in!

Gemini

May 22 - June 21

You may be big and tough enough to face a worrying situation alone by there is no reason why you should. Call on friends and colleagues to back you up today.

Cancer

June 22 - July 23

A loved one is eager to kiss and make up and, deep down, so are you. Get over your hurt feelings and get back together. And remember: Everyone falls out occasionally.

Leo

July 24 - Aug. 23

According to the planets, affairs of the heart need extra attention today, as do friendships that seem to be drifting apart. The upcoming new moon can heal any rift. But first that has to be your desire.

Virgo

Aug. 24 - Sept. 23

Most people respond well to reason but one person is behaving so badly that you may have no choice but to lay down the law. No one plays hardball better than a Virgo.

Libra

Sept. 24 - Oct. 23

If someone offers you advice today, you would be wise to listen and, if possible, take action. The last thing they want is to see you make a silly and costly mistake — and you don't want to see it either.

Scorpio

Oct. 24 - Nov. 22

An opportunity to improve your status at work looks tempting but the planets warn it will mean a lot of extra responsibility and you already have too much on your plate.

Sagittarius

Nov. 23 - Dec. 21

Your plans for the day should be based on what interests you, not on what other people expect of you. If you let them tell you what to do once, they will do it again and again.

Capricorn

Dec. 22 - Jan. 20

You may be doing well but you are also worried that the more you gain, the more likely it is someone will come along and take it away from you. That's far too negative an attitude — and far too materialistic.

Aquarius

Jan. 21 - Feb. 19

Routine tasks will come easy to you today and you will feel immensely pleased with yourself when it's all done. You will also be entitled to take it easy this evening, maybe in the company of a special friend.

Pisces

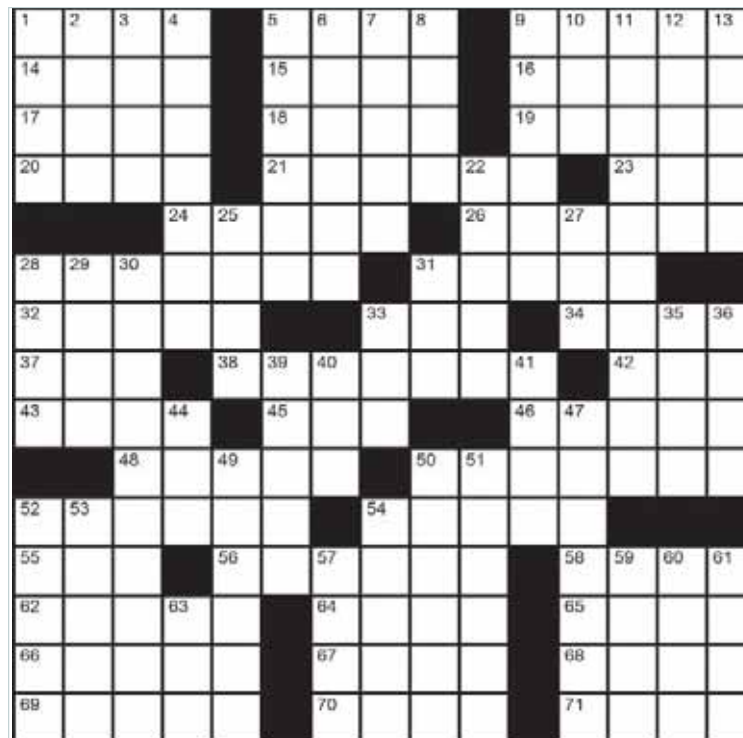

Feb. 20 - March 20

If you have something to say, you must speak up. According to your solar chart, a frank exchange of views is not just an option but a must. Without it, confusion and bad feelings will continue. SALLY BROMPTON
